The Kind Winters of Kashi

- Akshil Ahuja

Winter brings with freezing temperatures
But rejuvenating us here are
The chants of 'Har Har Mahadev'
Echoing through the streets of Benaras

Marking another year's end
Are the misty mornings and chilling days
After the refreshing morning walks we return
Only to be comforted by the heater's blaze

In the fog, nothing can you see
As the white blanket covers the city
Amidst it all, a sip of the hot morning tea
Awaits passionate and the needy

The city wakes up with the break of dawn
Chilling baths avert the morning laze
With persistent occurrences of a yawn
Varanasi rises from the haze

Walk through freezing winds and foggy roads
Only to receive the warmth of the ghat
Pick your winter delicacy, as per your moods
And savor them till they last

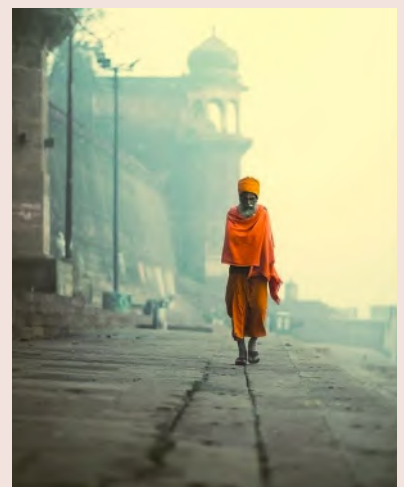

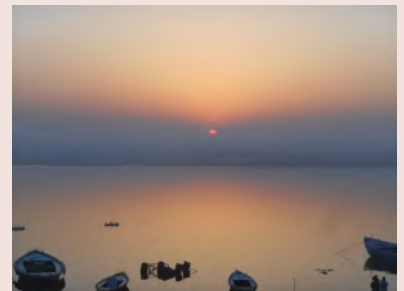

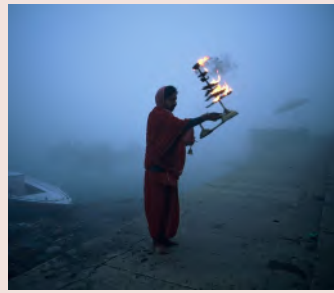

The ghats are quite and serene
As cold breeze blows through the scene
Boatmen huddle close to the fires
And the city sleeps, wrapped in its wintery attire

For some, winter marks a new beginning
As they get ready to bid their second home farewell
Braving through their placement preludes
They look upon what the future holds

Winter is a season of fun and party
With friends around, the times enhance
All it takes is a sip of hot tea
And it becomes a season of remembrance

The chilling mornings become the reason for hot baths and late rise
Winter becomes an unforgetting season
In a city that never ceases to surprise

The ghats lie quiet, the river still
The night falls and in the sky, stars are drawn
A silence falls in the chill of the night
As the city sleeps, awaiting the next dawn
